PATH TO THE MOON

LH3M ENGAGES WITH CONGRESS

Lunar Helium-3 Mining leadership recently met with the Congress to discuss the scarcity of helium-3 and its importance to emerging technologies, particularly quantum computing. The conversation highlighted the limited terrestrial supply, rising demand, and the potential for lunar resources to provide a scalable source, while sharing our approach to developing technologies engineered for prospecting, extracting, and processing helium-3 within the challenging lunar environment. As quantum technologies continue to advance, establishing a secure and scalable helium-3 supply chain is becoming an increasingly important strategic priority.

CONNECTING WITH THE QUANTUM INDUSTRY

At Quantum World Congress 2026, LH3M CEO Chris Salvino met with dilution refrigerator manufacturers and quantum technology companies to discuss the growing challenges facing the helium-3 supply chain. These conversations highlighted helium-3's critical role in quantum computing and the importance of developing a reliable, scalable supply as the industry grows. Chris also shared LH3M's vision for how lunar helium-3 could help address future supply needs.

LH3M JOINS NASA–USGS WORKSHOP

Lunar Helium-3 Mining CEO Chris Salvino will present at the 4th NASA–USGS Workshop, "From Orbit to Outcrop: Concepts for Offworld Resource Exploration and Access," taking place October 13–15, 2026, at NASA Ames in California.

His key podium presentation, "Helium-3: A Collapsing Global Supply Chain and the Race to the Moon," will highlight the growing importance of helium-3 and the opportunity presented by lunar resources. The workshop brings together government and industry to explore concepts for detecting, assessing, and accessing resources on the Moon and beyond.
